Leadership

Webster's Dictionary defines leadership as the "capacity to lead". Becoming a leader in today's workplace is not an easy task to accomplish. Workplaces are filled with differences that can make a leadership role difficult to step into. Many are placed in supervision roles with no leadership skills, leading to a lack of progress.

But, how do you train yourself to be a leader? This month, we focus on the traits, tricks, and training needed to be a leader. As engineers, stepping into the role of a leader is as important of a tool as our excel spreadsheet ability; don't let your skills get rusty.

Join us this month and gain more insights into the "capacity to lead".

March's Meeting Topic:

Contemporary Leadership

How "you" can become an inspiring leader

Presented by Nancy Lemon of Professional Development Group

Most people think that leadership is only for those individuals that are in a management position and have employees reporting to them. The truth is anyone can be a leader and companies don't seem to have enough leadership throughout an organization. Our guest speaker, Nancy Lemon will share how you can become an inspiring leader. She'll share top traits and characteristics that make someone a great leader.

Nancy Lemon is the President of Professional Development Group. Nancy has comprehensive and diversified expertise in consulting to organizations in the implementation of strategic sales, customer loyalty & leadership initiatives focused on improving corporate effectiveness.

Nancy's expertise includes working with sales, customer service & leadership individuals/teams consulting, coaching and facilitating workshops on varying topics such as: building relationships, presentation skills, influential leadership, building effective teams, time management, e-mail & telephone etiquette, managing the difficult customer, emotional intelligence, goal setting, attitude, prospecting for new business, handling objections &/or difficult situations, working with decision makers, closing the sale, marketing your business and customer loyalty.
